

The most creative recipes and food writing from around the world

Once the best food writing and recipes were in cookbooks and magazines. Not anymore. Now you'll find them on the Internet in food weblogs that cover the cuisines, cooking, and cultures of the world. Food weblogs sizzle with passion and commitment for food: how to cook and what to cook, where to eat and what to eat.

Digital Dish is a fine sampling of five seasons of the best food weblogs have to offer. Over 20 authors from around the world will amuse and inspire you as they whip up stories like:

- How to Fry wine
 - How to plan and serve a Singapore New Year's Feast
- How to throw an authentic braai
- What to do with Marmite

Even TV news shows, Gourmet magazine and newspapers like the San Francisco Chronicle, Boston Globe and Le Monde have picked up on the food blog trend. They are all covering food blogs and writing about some of the authors you will find in this book. Six of the contributing authors were finalists and two were winners at the 2004 Food Blogging Awards.

Treat yourself! No other book has food writing and recipes that will stir up your imagination and your zeal for cooking like this one.
